

Wendy's Reflections

WHAT WILL THEY SAY?

I wonder what those attending my Celebration of Life service will say.

Will they say I made a difference?

Will they talk about my accomplishments or my relationships?

Will they go on and on about my achievements or will they celebrate how I showed up for life?

I want to leave the world a better place. I want to have touched lives in ways that they were better for it. I want people to smile when they think of me and our friendship.

I don't want to be remembered as Ghandi, Mother Teresa, Jesus, or any of the other great spiritual masters. I want to be remembered as Wendy, a woman who made a difference in their lives. A woman who knew who she was to be here on earth and lived it fully.

I hope I have lots more years ahead of me to live out that dream, but given the mystery of death, I will live one day at a time with intention and purpose and authenticity. For now, I will let go of driven behavior obsessed with accomplishment and choose a more authentic road.

As I make the journey, I choose to spread love and light in the world as only I can.

How can that not make a difference?
